PLANT NURSERY HIGHLIGHTS

Spring 2026

Shop in person at Bartram's Garden beginning April 18.
Thank you for supporting the Garden!

CONTENTS

The following plant nursery highlights have been selected by the growers at Bartram's Garden and the Sankofa Community Farm at Bartram's Garden. The assemblage of highlighted plants is meant to help connect you to the spirit of the past, present, and future of these grounds and beyond. From plants that made these lands their home for centuries to crops that were brought overseas through trade or through the forced or voluntary movement of peoples, plants tell stories about who we have been, who we are, and who we can become. We are a place of many stories and we invite you to grow with us!

 PLEASE NOTE: To make sure that your garden is as healthy as possible, plants will be available for sale only when seasonally appropriate. More plants will be offered as the season continues, and not all plants in this catalog will be available at the same time. If you have questions about when to purchase a particular plant, please let us know.

Kitchen Garden Classics

The Kitchen Garden includes examples of plants a family could have grown to sustain their needs in a Philadelphia garden prior to 1830. We include plants that were new and unusual introductions to this continent, such as tomatoes and peppers. A typical kitchen garden prior to the mid-nineteenth century would have included a variety of what were referred to as “herbs”: vegetables, plants used in dyeing and textiles, medicinal and culinary plants, and plants used for cosmetics and household cleaners. Today, we grow a mix of all these categories, as well as seed crops to help preserve varieties that have survived from this time.

Vegetables

purple calabash tomato benne sesame purple Kingsessing bean
Willings Barbados pepper
speckled trout lettuce

Herbs

marsh mallow caraway spearmint
English thyme
Roman chamomile

Common Flower Garden Offerings

The Common Flower Garden is sited on the Schuylkill-facing side of the Bartrams' home, directly across from their front porch. It contains both native and newly introduced species of flowering plants. During the 18th and 19th century, plants were shared with the Bartrams from all over the world; this garden is curated to represent their most intriguing specimens.

Annuals

Calendula officinalis - yellow calendula
Mimosa pudica - sensitive plant
Gomphrena globosa - globe thistle

Perennials

Iris pallida - Dalmation iris
Phlox paniculata - garden phlox
Monarda fistulosa - wild bergamot
Aster novi-angliae - New England aster

Trees

Franklin Tree - Franklinia alatamaha

Wilderness Garden Varieties

The Wilderness Garden includes a series of gardens and groves between the more formal Upper Gardens and the riverfront. Though there is limited historical information about how this part of the site looked in the Bartrams' time, wilderness gardens like this were a popular style in 18th-century European estate gardening. John Bartram's nursery was one of the earliest commercial enterprises to sell North American plants as individuals or fragments. The family made great efforts to observe and record details of relationships within the plants' original habitat, sometimes but not always noting ethnobotanical relationships. Today's designs are based on studying natural ecosystems, the Bartrams' letters, and nursery catalogs of the time. Books from the Bartrams' library and knowledge gained from Indigenous First Nations of North America from the territories where these plants were collected also inform the design.

Ann Bartram Carr Garden Choices

When you step into the Ann Bartram Carr Garden you are entering an interpretation of an early 19th-century public exhibition garden. Named for John Bartram's granddaughter Ann Bartram Carr, who first established this garden space as a public entrance to Bartram's Garden, it was designed to feature newly imported plant species from around the globe alongside the most fashionable plants of the time. In this garden, you can find living examples of that moment in plant history as well as observe the wildlife that still depends on many of these plants today.

Annuals

Xerochrysum bracteatum - strawflower
Dracopis amplexicaulis - claspig coneflower
Ricinus communis - castor bean
Salvia coccinea - scarlet sage

Tenders/Houseplants:

Pelargonium fragrans 'Variegatum' - variegated nutmeg geranium
Lantana camara - shrub verbena
Solenostemon scutellarioides - coleus

Shrubs

Nerium oleander - oleander

Perennials

Phlomis fruticosa - Jerusalem sage Aster cordifolius - blue wood aster
Aquilegia canadensis - eastern columbine
Conoclinium coelestinum - blue mistflower

Greenhouse and Nursery Plant Picks

There were once as many as ten greenhouses around the main house at Bartram's Garden. Beginning in 1760, the first greenhouse was heated by a Franklin stove; later greenhouses were heated with wood fires or, after 1820, anthracite coal. Today, the working greenhouses are insulated with plastic bubbles and heated with electric overhead heaters, sequestered in the southwest portion of the Garden. Currently, there are two greenhouses supplying both the Sankofa Community Farm at Bartram's Garden and the wider 50-acre landscape, along with floor space to raise nursery crops for sale to the general public—like you! Learn more on p. 8 about the crops Sankofa grows for the farm and community gardens. Nursery offerings change seasonally as we increase the diversity of what we cultivate. The seed and plant trade lives on!

Helianthus annuus - valentine sunflower
Trapaeolum majus - Alaska mix nasturtium

Eastwick Pavilion Moon Garden

Many of the plants that are grown at Bartram's Garden play an integral role in the surrounding environment and our health. Some of these plants, such as pollinator plants, support our food web and nurture the ecosystem. Pollinator plants provide nectar for insects and birds. They provide havens for predator insects that keep other insect populations at bay that may devour our crops. The moon garden at the Eastwick Pavilion is specifically planted for moths and other night-time pollinators attracted to plants that are pale colored and night-blooming or night-scented.

Tender Perennials

Salvia 'Amistad' - friendship sage

Santolina chamaecyparissus - lavender cotton

Helichrysum italicum - curry plant

Lavandula angustifolia - English lavender

Sankofa Vegetable Selections

Sankofa Community Farm at Batram's Garden is a 3.5-acre production and teaching farm rooted in the experience of the African Diaspora in Southwest Philly. For a decade, Sankofa has worked in a unique partnership with our community youth and elders to connect around foodways, culture, and healing of body, mind and soul. It is a spiritually-rooted farm, honoring the varied wisdom and spiritual practices of our ancestors.
